Introduction

When someone's died, sorting out Wills and estates might be the last thing on your mind, or it could be a welcome distraction. However, if someone has asked you to be the executor of their estate, after their death there are things you'll have to do. In this guide we'll explain what's expected of you, the steps you need to follow and where to find help if you need it.

What is an executor?

Anyone who makes a Will must name an executor. An executor is legally responsible for handling a person's estate (their money, property and possessions) when they die and for carrying out the instructions in their Will.

Who can be an executor?

You can act as an executor even if you're going to inherit something from the Will. In fact, an executor is often a spouse, child or other family member. The person making the Will can appoint up to four executors, so you can share the responsibility with others, but all decisions must then be made jointly. There can often be at least two executors appointed, for example a family member and a professional, such as a solicitor, just in case one dies or is otherwise unable to carry out their duties.

What do executors do?

- They make sure all property owned by the person who's died is secure as soon as possible.
- They collect all assets and money due to the estate (including property).
- They pay any outstanding taxes and debts (out of the estate).
- They distribute the estate to the people who are entitled to it under the terms of the Will.
- They arrange the funeral, if the Will contains specific instructions for them to do so.

BEFORE YOU AGREE TO BE AN EXECUTOR

Being an executor isn't easy. It can take up a lot of your time and might be the last thing you feel like doing when you're grieving, so think carefully before you agree to take on the responsibility.

Can I change my mind?

Once you've accepted the role, you have several options if you later change your mind:

- If you can, talk about your decision with the person who appointed you so they can change the name of the executor in their Will.
- Immediately after the person has died, but before you've started to deal with the estate, you can sign a notice of renunciation of the B.C. Supreme Court Civil Court, and file the renunciation with the court. This will alert the Court that you are stepping aside as the executor.
- After the person has died and when you've started to deal with the estate, you cannot step down unless you have a good reason, such as ill health or a family emergency.

Executor's Checklist

Estate administration is demanding and time-consuming. In addition to the paperwork, executors must cope with tax laws, inheritance laws, family property laws, court procedures and the demands of beneficiaries.

This checklist has been prepared as a guide for the responsibilities and duties that are likely to fall on anyone acting as an Executor/Executrix.
